

Air Force Office for Security Review Web Site Review Checklist

This checklist is an adaptation of AFI 33-129, AFI 35-101, and the SAF/PAS Security Review Guide. It is designed to assist reviewers in conducting a Web review of their public Web site. All Air Force agencies have been directed to conduct an annual review of public Web sites to ensure that it does not contain sensitive information. The intention is not to remove or deny public access to Air Force information, but to prevent inadvertent or unauthorized public release of sensitive information via the Web. Placing material on a public Web site constitutes global public release and makes information immediately available for aggregation and electronic manipulation via data mining. A Web review ensures that the American public is served without jeopardizing military operations or personnel. The Air Force has more than 160,000 known Web pages to review.

The following are standard points we use in evaluating suitability for approval of all sites and web information submitted for security and policy review.

Availability. Material submitted for review should not already be in the public domain. Material in the public domain can be of two types: Common domain information (previously released, previously cleared, basic scientific research under no intellectual property restrictions, or publicly available) or inadvertently released.

Common domain information. No need to review this information. Posting of information still requires a common sense test of basic standards.

Inadvertent release information.

- a. If information passes the tests involved in paragraph 4, then we have no objection to its continued release.
- b. If information does not pass the tests involved with paragraph 4, then the material must be removed from public access, because it conflicts with official policy.
- c. Inadvertent releases point out information security weaknesses which must be addressed. Leaks through bad web controls must be rectified, leaks through bad security and policy review procedures must be handled.

Information Content. Information should pass the standard tests of a good security review program.

Neighborhood. The path to the site should not also have branches which could lead to controversial, inappropriate web sites.

Links.

- a. Links to other sites should not convey AF endorsement.
- b. Web master should establish a non-discriminatory policy with regard to links. That is: A link to product A is placed on the site. Product B is just as useful to the user as product A. The webmaster should then link also to Product B.

6. Are there product endorsements links to commercial sites that may imply endorsement?
 - ø__ Yes, but they are mission related.
 - ø__ Links are to commercial software (no logos)
 - ø__ Is a specific browser or software recommended?
 - ø__ External framing used.
 - ø__ Links to restricted sites (single link to logon screen is proper)
7. Does the site contain W3C nonstandard plugins, executables or files:
 - ø__ Microsoft Word, Excel files
 - ø__ ActiveX or Frontpage bots
 - ø__ Zip or self-expanding (exe) files
8. Does the site contain Non-OMB approved surveys or questionnaires?

The following is a list of materials that are not recommended for posting on Air Force Public Web pages and may violate InfoSEC or OPSEC concerns. * Indicates likely FOUO.
